Commentary - Winton CM - October 2023<sup>(10)</sup>

The fund was up in October, alongside declines in global equity, bond, and commodity indices. Profits accrued in currencies and stock indices, with losses concentrated in energies and precious metals.

Currencies were the top contributor to performance, with trend following and diversifying signals making money. Short positioning in the Japanese yen accounted for the lion's share of these gains as the Bank of Japan made only minor changes to its yield curve control policy. The yen is now nearing multi-decade lows versus the US dollar. Elsewhere, short positioning in stock indices was profitable with the Russell 2000 leading the gains, outpacing losses from long exposure to the TOPIX.

Energies pared performance in the month after a reversal in previous trends – up for oil and oil products and down for natural gas – led to losses. A sharp reversal in gold prices was another detractor of note, with both trend following and carry losing money.
